MAKING DECISIONS ON SUPERVISION AND CONTACT CHANGES

When CSB has happened between siblings and children have felt violated and unsafe

VORS

VOICE

- Can everyone in the family feel like they can speak up and show little fear of the consequences of talking about a worry for someone's behaviour?
- Do parents and caregivers take this seriously and support both children?
- Does everyone acknowledge that the rules were broken and had an impact on others?

OPENNESS

- Has a "no secrets" motto become part of family communication?
- Can children and caregivers express their thoughts and feelings with each other and cope with these?
- Is there consistent and fair caregiving – with structure, roles, boundaries, and conflict resolution skills practiced every day?

RESPONSIBILITY

- Are people in the family able to take responsibility for their behaviours and accept natural/logical consequences for their actions?
- Are parents and caregivers able to support and hold children accountable for their behaviours
- Can everyone acknowledge mistakes or poor decisions, apologize and be honest with themselves about the poor decision or mistake?
- Are people able to focus on behaviours and not the person?

SAFETY

- Have family members accepted and respected the safety plans or new rules?
- Do caregivers have some guesses about what developed and maintained the concerning sexual behaviours in the family and has this been addressed?
- Are parents and caregivers able to identify and address unsafe situations?
- Do family members feel like they have the freedom or permission to say "stop" or "pause" or "I'm not ready" if a change to the safety plan is suggested?
